

Congressional Fire Services Caucus

- Request: Join the Congressional Fire Services Caucus
- What is the Congressional Fire Services Caucus?

The Congressional Fire Services Caucus (Fire Caucus) was established in 1987 to educate members of Congress about the fire and emergency services. It is a bipartisan group that works together to improve the readiness of local first responders.
- How does the Fire Caucus work?

The Fire Caucus is one of the largest in Congress. It is not about ideology, but rather respect and support for our nation's first responders. Acting in a bipartisan manner, the Caucus is dedicated to addressing the needs and challenges of our nation's fire and emergency services. The Caucus serves as a forum for education and discussion on a broad range of issues that impact the readiness and response capabilities of our nation's first responders to all forms of hazards.
- Why is joining the Fire Caucus important?

Joining the Caucus helps to build relationships with local fire service leaders, who are often pillars of the community. Becoming a member of the Caucus does not obligate members of Congress to support any particular bill or agenda. Rather, it is a general expression of support for the fire and emergency services community. Once a member of Congress joins the Caucus their office will be contacted by the Congressional Fire Services Institute (CFSI) with information about how to increase involvement in fire service activities.
- How does a member of Congress join the Fire Caucus?

The easiest way to join the Fire Caucus is to email CFSI's Director of Government Relations, Michaela Campbell (mccampbell@cfsi.org), or through any of the offices of the current Caucus co-chairs.
